A report was current that Mr. Cornelius Vanderbilt had been thrown from his wagon and injured, and this led to considerable sales of New York Central and Hudson River, under the impression that if he died his stocks might be thrown upon the market. When, however, it was assertained that the Commodore's injuries were very slight, the excitencest shated. This recalled to him a similar state of feeting which once prevailed some years ago, when the stock of the Nicaragua Transit Company was actively dealt in. The Commodors was sick, and his decease of feeting which once prevailed some years ago, when the stock of the Meansqua Transit Company was actively dealt in. The Commodors was sick, and his decease would have greatly disturbed its market value; so the shrewdest and most interested speculators made it a peint to waylay the Commodore's doctor daily and put some such question as, "How's the Commodore's pulso this morning?" Those are some of the ludicrous incidents that occasionally underlie stockjobbing.

The market weakened after the call and then became strong again. At the open board at one o'clock it was steady.

The money market was generally reported easy at 7 per cent on call till after two o'clock, when some of the bears resumed their efforts to produce tringency, and, although in no need of loans, set out on a tour of foquiry for money. This had some effect in inducing weak holders of stocks to sell out, and lower prices followed during the rest of the fternoon. The banks report a subsidence of the drain conward; but the fact that exchange on New York at New Orleans and Mobile is at a discount of 2 a 3 per cent keeps up the flow of currency in that direction.
